IIT Chicago-Kent College of Law is a national leader in legal education, recognized for the scholarly excellence of its faculty and distinguished by its curricular innovation. Chicago-Kent's Institute on the Supreme Court of the United States (ISCOTUS) leverages two of its core strengths -- cutting-edge legal scholarship and technological innovation -- to educate internal and external audiences about the Court and its role in our constitutional system of government. ISCOTUS presents law review symposia, public lectures and continuing legal education programs drawing on the significant intellectual contributions of the law school faculty, and houses the Oyez Project, a complete and authoritative internet-based source for all audio recorded in the Court since the installation of a recording system in October 1955.

JACK MILLER CENTER

For Teaching America's Founding Principles and History

The Jack Miller Center is a nonpartisan, nonprofit foundation dedicated to enriching education in America's Founding Principles and history. The JMC is a unique resource for higher education in the United States. The organization provides a wide variety of ongoing programs and support services to a growing network of college professors who want to expand opportunities for their students to learn about American history, government, and political thought. Today there are nearly 500 JMC faculty partners on 179 college campuses across the country, including Notre Dame and partner programs in the Chicago area.

The core programs of the JMC are: Two-week summer institutes for young professors that put them on a path to getting their first job and launching their career, support on college campuses for programs on the American Founding and Western tradition, the postdoctoral fellowship program, and the Constitution Day Initiative.
